If the COVID Era has taught us anything, it's that we must be proactive about managing our careers, be adaptable and responsive at a moment's notice, and anticipate the constantly changing landscape of technology and the workforce - - to be proactive rather than reactive. That means investing in yourself, developing your network, becoming more relevant, speaking up and getting involved. In order to use your voice and be heard, you have to invite yourself to the table and know the value you bring.

Lynne Prescott, CCLS, is the President of Legal Professionals, Incorporated, and has been a legal professional for nearly 40 years. She is also a writer, blogger, and public speaker emphasizing the importance of personal and professional development, giving back, and paying it forward.
